TARIFF COMMISSION

WASHINGTON, May 17.—The president is verrun with applications from nearly all the tates for appointments on the tariff commis lon It is said nearly 200 names have been resented at the White House with high en dorsements for the appointment Most of the men suggested are representatives of special interests and the president feels reported upon high authority, has decided that it shall not be composed of gentlemen connected with the principal industries of the country It may be that in making up the committee the president will choose members some gentlemen interested in special branches of trade They will not be selected on account of their familiarity with single departments of industry but because of their capacity to deal with tariff as a whole. The wool growers are taking great interest in the commission and making a determined effort to secure the appointment of Mr Hayes of Boston, a representative of the Wool Growers association Massachusetts representatives generally are opposed to the appointment of Mr Edward Atkinson One of the members of the delegation said to day that Atkinson is very self opinionated and an impracticable man in a body where mutual concession must be made to reach a harmonious understanding Members of the Illinois delegation held a meeting to day to try to agree on some man to recommend to the president for appointment as their commissioner A majority favored the appointment of Mr Robert Porter, late of the census bureau but no agreement was reached Ex Vice-President Wheeler has been urged but is averse to the commission

RECOMMENDATIONS

WASHINGTON, May 17.—Secretary Frelinghuysen has a cablegram from the United States consul at Aden saying simply that Prescott sailed on the 14th It would seem therefore that Prescott is now on his way to Washington via Panama and will probably bear his own dispatches concerning final results

MESCALERO APACHES IN TROUBLE

WASHINGTON, May 17.—Agent Llewellyn telegraphs the commissioner of Indian affairs that in view of the failure of congress to make appropriations for the subsisting of Mescalero Apaches and in view of the facts that the beef and flour at hand will only last until about the first of July and that the Indians have no means of subsisting themselves, it seems to me it will be policy to transfer them to the war department, which should take charge of them before starvation compels them to commit depredations which naturally lead to great loss of life and destruction of valuable property As soon as supplies are cut off military will have to act Therefore I think it advisable that troops take charge of the Mescalero Apaches at once Nothing short of force can compel them to remain on the reservation and starve The action of congress in this matter means to the Mescaleros extermination

INDIANA MATTERS

NEW YORK, May 17.—The Washington correspondent of the Mail and Express says Senator Sewell gave notice to the military committee to-day that at the next meeting he will call up the bill to restore Fitz John Porter to his rank as general in the army and retire him, paying him for the time between his dismissal and the official close of the war Senator Logan will no longer be opposed Heretofore he has been its most bitter opponent The committee had a special meeting this evening to consider the compulsory retirement amendment to the army appropriation bill The long pending controversy over the Venezuelan claims is to be disposed of The assistant secretary of state, Bancroft Davis, is preparing a report which will be submitted to congress in a few days. In this he takes the ground that after thorough and careful investigation the department is clearly convinced that in the presentation of these claims they were in many instances fraudulent and that Venezuela was right in her appeal to settle the awards This probably ends all attempts to enforce these claims by either congress or the state department Both foreign committees of congress are considering the subject of joining the best governments in fitting out and maintaining an expedition and supply stations It is believed that by united action in this matter some, if not all results may be reached in the settlement of important questions involved

MELVILLE'S CASE

WASHINGTON, May 17.—The naval committee recommends adverse action in the case of Chief Engineer Melville for reasons fully stated in the communication from Secretary Chandler, in response to inquiries on the part of the committee The secretary says while he believed Chief Engineer Melville alone in his power for the rescue of his ship mates Information from all sources in regard to the search for the command of De Long and his companions is so limited that he cannot recommend the passage of the resolution at this time The secretary suggests no action be taken until the next session of congress, by which time more decisive action can be had

STEAMER SCYTHIA EXAMINED

NEW YORK, May 17.—The steamship Scythia was signaled but is not expected at quarantine till 2 o clock to-night and will not be boarded by the health officers until after sunrise The regulation is not to allow any one on board incoming vessels before the health officers, therefore nothing definite is expected before morning of the suspected Dublin assassins on board if such there be. Reporters state they can learn nothing about the revenue cutter said to have gone down the bay with the United States marshal to meet the Scythia

LATER.—The steamer Scythia passed Fire Island at 10 o clock last night and anchored outside the bar She will probably come up to quarantine about 8 or 9 o clock this morning The Dixter with Marshal Knox on board went to Sandy Hook but it was thought he would not attempt to board the Scythia until morning. The marshal is reported to have said he would content himself with watching the Scythia The Chester A Arthur, with Pinkertons detectives on board, was lying at quarantine at one this morning but the authorities believe the efforts of New York police are merely precautionary and that there is no real ground for the suspicion that the Irish assassins are on board It is not thought the British authorities have seriously communicated anything to the American police

NEW YORK, May 17.—The marshal made a thorough search of the steamer Scythia but found no concealed assassins They will also search the city to day

Mining Reform on 'Change

NEW YORK, May 17.—To day it was announced that the securities of the following mines had been ordered stricken from the list Green, Auburn, Battle Creek Boulder Con Glyndale, Indian Queen, Legal Tender, Malachite, Mineral Creek, Nico, New Silver Nugget, Old Silver Nugget, Standley, and South The president said yesterday, in discussing this action of the exchange, that there still remained on the boards a number of other securities not less deserving of being thrown into the street, and they will go too, before many days. Prominent members of the New York mining exchange declare there was a manifest for a similar running process on the list and it was supposed official action would be taken soon and said if we don't clear ourselves from this multitude of swindlers all our business will go to race and ruin The public won't trust us that is the case might as well face it at once It would be well if it is to be done at all it should be done now [illegible] mining [illegible] the public will consent to [illegible] change has taken the initiative in a movement which it is proposed will [illegible] in building properties [illegible] boards a long line of stocks has been listed and dealt in, of which [illegible] anything of a sub-stagnant nature In fact it has been long notorious that mines which were boarded at [illegible] have [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] but prominent in [illegible] transactions This was a premium [illegible] councils and upon [illegible] dels known [illegible] to a legitimate [illegible] stock [illegible] lists from the lists of the exchange [illegible] President Stanley [illegible] time [illegible] of managers of the exchange [illegible] upon the matter a few days [illegible] and promptly determined to take decisive action

To support the nominee is stalwart doctrine, but then stalwarts are well, human and sometimes just the least bit inconsistent. The tale of two custom houses might have an application.

The Bonanza Idea is still somewhat discussed by our state exchanges. It is well enough to keep in view that the real question of interest is not how much money a senator may happen to have, but whether mere wealth should make a senator. There are proper and improper methods of getting to the senate.

The other day quite a number of mines were stricken from the list of the New York mining exchange. Wild cat mining schemes are a decided injury to the states and territories having mining interest, and those newspapers that excuse dishonest proceedings and call swindling smartness, increase the injury. In this connection the name Little Pittsburg would be suggestive.

Some interest is felt in the question of ex-Secretary Blaine's running for congress. It does not seem very probable that he will take such a step. In case he should do so his chances of success would undoubtedly be good. By the way, one of our exchanges suggests that the patronage of the administration would be used against him if ever he were a candidate. We wonder how this would be.

The Denver Tribune quotes as a neat phrase that President Arthur in signing one Chinese bill after vetoing another has vetoed President Arthur's former veto. But after all, even if the president is inconsistent, people do not seem very much surprised. Some men would be expected to act according to principles of statesmanship and right, but it is claimed that the present executive is "a sagacious politician" who wants to be elected to the presidency. Nominating conventions should learn to be careful about candidates for the vice-presidency.

It is reported that Worthington the new collector of customs at Boston, intends to make such changes in his force as will add to its efficiency. If this means efficiency in collecting the revenue of the government, the step is worthy of commendation. But this would be according to civil service reform principles and would be a queer proceeding under the circumstances. If the collector is trying to add efficiency to an effort to make Butler governor of Massachussetts, he may be in better accord with the administration, but he is hardly serving the public in just the right way.

While we regret to see the disturbance that seems to be brewing in the republican party in Pennsylvania, yet it is but teaching the old lesson, that "bossism" in politics is losing its powers, and the sooner the politicians learn this the better.—[Silver Cliff Herald.

Senator Mitchell, whether he is right or wrong, will get a good deal of sympathy throughout the country and also a great deal of abuse. But as times for voting come, the stalwarts will be willing enough to have the help of the independents. Then after election the independents will be treated again in the same unfair and ignorant way. But the advance of civilization will conquer the [illegible] The bronze idol of such sort of people may withstand reason but they can not withstand death.

COLORADO COLLEGE

In a few days Colorado college will for the first time graduate some students in its classical course. The event is a matter of more importance than may appear to many. The new west has filled up rapidly, and the common desire to make money has been allowed to have too much space. The effect of this spirit on our college students has been very evident. Too often they have come only soon to be gone. In College as elsewhere has been the story of ceaseless change. The large majority of those attending college have been satisfied with very mere attainments. America has been teached than when even two students are found who value a more thorough education.

It is proper to keep constantly before our minds the unselfishness to which we owe our college. The current expenses, as has been stated before, are paid by eastern people. A few days ago a Denver paper contained an article on the tourists who have recently visited that city, in which the parsimony of the New Englanders was unfavorably commented on. Stinginess is an old charge against the Yankees, but when a school is to be supported or some other good cause forwarded, they give more freely than any other people in the world. Such proofs of generosity as Colorado college should not be forgotten, even if the Yankee tourists did not patronize the Denver bars.

Colorado, for a state of its age, is very wealthy. But what have the people of this state done for those struggling amid discouragement for the highest interests of the people? To spend money foolishly and recklessly rather than to give it to some good cause is not in all cases a virtue.

The Pains of Proof-Reading

Boston Globe.

"Papa, who is that sorrowful, sad looking man we just met?"

"He is a proof reader on a morning newspaper, my son."

"Well, I should think he would be very happy, reading all the news and pretty stories. Why does he look so miserable?"

"There's where you're off, my son. Happy, indeed! He has cause to look miserable, I'll tell you. He is an asylum for the feeble-minded people who imagine they were sent into the world to enlighten it through the columns of the newspapers. He is a kindergarten for vain young men, and cranky old fellows who think the newspaper would cease to exist should they fail to contribute to its support from their storehouse of general knowledge, brilliant ideas and classic lore. He is also a hothouse for the propagation of young compositors. He is expected to know the name, nativity, date of birth and death of everybody, from a cupstake to the president, and all the officials and dignitaries of the world, especially in Russia, Turkey, China and Japan—which he does not know by a large majority. Some innocent people are under the impression that writers prepare their manuscript correctly, as the articles appear in the paper. Not so, my son. In many cases if an article should appear as originally written, the author would refuse to father it and never make another effort. But they must be encouraged, and so their productions are trimmed up in the office and made presentable. There are a great variety of contributors to the newspapers. First, there is the classical writer. He is always on the lookout for obsolete and uncommon words and phrases, never heard or seen except in the most complete, unabridged dictionaries. When he has collected a number of such words he goes to work and writes an article around them—that is, adapts the subjects to the words. He can't write a half column article without introducing the names of a lot of old mummies, who were petrified a thousand years before the advent of the Savior, whether they be germane to the subject or not. He provides himself with biographical dictionaries, with the names, professions and achievements of the old fellows, all classified and arranged, and then turns himself loose upon them. If he fails to spell the names correctly in copying them it is all right, for he knows the proof reader is bound to look them up and get them right in the paper or lose his job. He may write it Johannis Schneizer, but after a good deal of worrying and guessing it is found to mean Julius Cæsar. Then, there's the minister, who sends in a mere skeleton of a sermon, a page of which looks like the top of a tea box covered with Chinese hieroglyphics, all disconnected, with scripture proper names written in dots and dashes and the whole affair a complete enigma. However, he knows it will be all right, and that the printers and proof reader will unravel it, no matter if they are fit subjects for the madhouse before they get through with it. Then, there is the local reporter. Well, he is a good fellow and means well, he has troubles of his own. But if he spells a man's name four different ways in an item three inches long, he knows the proof reader will drop everything rush around find a directory or something else, and fix it all right before it goes into the paper. Also comes the statistical fiend, with his figures all presenting the same appearance, he not having time to cast up his columns for totals, knowing the proof reader is bound to fix them up. There are also country correspondents—the young poet, the scientist, and the linguistic smart Aleck, who can't write fifty lines without scattering in bits of French, Latin, Spanish to show that he has been there. It matters not whether he gets his foreign words in right or not, the proof reader must search around and get everything right somehow or the next day he will hear from the powers in the sanctum. In fact, to be a success, the proof-reader must be an animate cyclopedia, with the patience of Job and the endurance of adamant but he is not, and hence his troubles."

"Well papa, he has plenty of time to fix everything and correct all the mistakes of the writers and printers, has he not?"

"Oh, yes. That is, taking an article which has required the author half a day to write, the proof reader has about twenty minutes in which to correct and put it into stripe, with the foreman bobbing around like a hen on hot ashes, hurrying things up calling for this or that matter and crying out 'What is the matter with that proof? Hurry it up or it'll be left out!'"

"Well, the proof reader must be well paid for all that hard work and vexation, isn't he?"

"Oh certainly. In some offices he gets as much as $12 per week, and in some he gets more. At four o'clock in the morning he goes home with his head buzzing like a bee hive, and feeling like a freight train had run over him, then the next day he goes down to the office trying to feel resigned in expectation of the G B (which means the grand bounce), for failing to properly edit some fellow's hog wash. But he doesn't live long, and his martyrdom on earth secures him a soft thing in the next world. Let's take a street car and go home."

Moral Character of Longfellow's Poetry

George William Curtis, in Harper's Magazine for June.

[illegible] literature were largely laid in New England, and they rest upon morality. Literary New England had never a trace of literary Bohemia. The most illustrious group, and the earliest, of American authors and scholars and literary men, the Boston and Cambridge group of the last generation—Channing, the two Danas, Sparks, Everett, Bancroft, Ticknor, Prescott, Norton, Ripley, Palfrey, Emerson, Parker, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Holmes, Whittier, Agassiz, Lowell, Motley—have been all sober and industrious citizens of whom Judge Sewall would have approved. Their lives as well as their works have ennobled literature. They have illustrated the moral sanity of genius.

Longfellow shares this trait with them all. It is the moral purity of his verse which at once charms the heart, and in his first most famous poem, the "Psalm of Life," it is the direct inculcation of a moral purpose. Those who insist that literary art, like all other art, should not concern itself positively with morality must reflect that the heart of this age has been touched as truly by Longfellow, however differently, as that of any time by its master poet. This, indeed, is his peculiar distinction. Among the great poetic names of the century in English literature, Burns, in a general way, is the poet of love, Wordsworth, of lofty contemplation of nature, Byron, of passion, Shelley of aspiration, Keats, of romance, Scott, of heroic legend, and not less, and quite as distinctively, Longfellow, of the domestic affections. He is the poet of the household, of the fireside of the universal home feeling. The infinite tenderness and patience, the pathos, and the beauty, of daily life, of familiar emotion and the common sense these are the significance of that verse whose beautiful and simple melody, softly murmuring for more than forty years, made the singer the most widely beloved of living men.

Longfellow's Independence

George William Curtis in Harper's Magazine for June.

The most urbane and sympathetic of men, never aggressive, nor vehement, nor self-asserting, he was yet thoroughly independent, and the individuality of his genius held its tranquil way as surely as the river Charles whose placid beauty he so often sang, wound through the meadows calm and free. When Longfellow came to Cambridge, the impulse of Transcendentalism in New England was deeply affecting scholarship and literature. It was represented by the most original of American thinkers and the typical American scholar, Emerson, and its elevating, purifying and emancipating influences are ineffaceable in our moral and intellectual history. Longfellow lived in the very heart of the movement. Its leaders were his cherished friends. He too was a scholar and a devoted student of German literature, who had drunk deeply also of the romance of German life. Indeed, his first important work stimulated the taste for German studies and the enjoyment of its literature more than any other impulse in this country. But he remained without the charmed Transcendental circle, serene, friendly and attentive. There are those whose career was wholly moulded by the intellectual revival of that time. But Longfellow was untouched by it, except as his sympathies were attracted by the vigor and purity of its influence. His tastes, his interests, his activities, his career, would have been the same had that great light never shone. If he had been the ductile, echoing, imitative nature that the more ardent disciples of the faith supposed him to be, he would have been absorbed and swept away by the flood. But he was as untouched by it as Charles Lamb by the wars of Napoleon.

The Hazel Kirke company is stopping at the National hotel.

A burro was sent via the Adams Express company yesterday to L. J. McCormick of Chicago.

Some of the Colorado Springs horses are taking the lead at the jockey-club races at Denver.

From present indications the J. M. Sigafus team of this city will not enter a team at the state tournament in August.

Ascension Day—Divine service at Grace church with celebration of the holy communion at 10 o'clock this morning.

Frank Sample of the Union Pacific and J. M. Edgar of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific were in the city yesterday.

Nearly all of the members of the Hazel Kirke company went to Manitou between five o'clock and the time of the performance last night.

Judge Field left for the east on the through Denver and Rio Grande express yesterday afternoon. He contemplates remaining absent some time.

The ladies of the Congregational church will give a reception this evening to welcome their new pastor, Rev. Mr. Gregg, and his wife. All are invited to attend.

Part of the Hazel Kirke company came over the D. & N. G. and the remainder, who in no way hankered after a nine mile coach ride, came over the Denver & Rio Grande.

The Colorado Springs depot presents a very animated appearance upon the arrival of the broad gauge from the north and the narrow gauge from the south at 4:55 in the afternoon.

The base ball grounds were completed last night and the Colorado Springs nine is now ready for a challenge from any club in the state—or outside of it as far as that is concerned.

Regular meeting of Pike's Peak lodge No. 38, I. O. O. F., takes place this evening at 8 o'clock, in their hall over Robinson's drug store. Visiting brethren are cordially invited to be present.

According to the Denver Tribune Adolph Hecker, a resident of Colorado Springs, has been arrested in that city and indicted by the grand jury for obtaining money under false pretenses.

Mr. A. Kaufmann, of the Denver Inter-Ocean was among the callers at the GAZETTE office yesterday. He represents a journal that is rapidly establishing for itself a reputation throughout the entire state.

Remember that the reserved seats for "Our Goblins," one of the funniest plays ever presented, will be on sale at Howbert Bros.' book store this morning. Secure your seats early, for there is bound to be a rush.

A petition was yesterday gotten up by the property owners residing on Moreno avenue profesing against the running of the Denver & New Orleans track through that street. Nearly every property owner on the street [illegible] of that street for the road is also in circulation.

It is seldom that Colorado Springs has in one week two such celebrated attractions in the theatrical line as Hazel Kirke and "Our Goblins." The latter company will appear in the opera house on Saturday night. "Our Goblins" is a musical extravaganza, exceedingly amusing and laughable in its make-up. Don't miss it by any means.

Still the burglars are at their work; an attempt was made on Tuesday night to burglarize the residence of Mr. J. Dozier on Weber street. The thief succeeded in gaining admittance to the house by the kitchen window, but in passing through one of the rooms made a noise that aroused the inmates of the house and caused him to flee for safety.

Coroner Perkins and Mr. F. J. Hemmett yesterday made a thorough examination of the outhouse in which was found the dead body of the unknown lady on Monday afternoon. Their search revealed two empty phials labeled laudanum, one purchased at different drug stores in this city. This is almost conclusive evidence that the woman committed suicide, and further indicates that she was determined in her purpose. She had laudanum in all three bottles, two of which she had emptied and the other was held in reserve in case the others failed to do the work. As yet nothing has been discovered that would throw the least light as to the identity of the woman. Two boxes of household goods which had been left by her at the Springs hotel were opened, but there was not a name on any article that would lead to the identity of the woman.

A Deserved Compliment.

The Leadville Herald, in a recent issue, pays the following well merited compliment to ex-Sheriff Smith:

Mr. Walter A. Smith, United States marshal of Colorado, has been in the city for two days past looking into the affairs of his department. Mr. Smith will make the best marshal Colorado has ever had. He is a worker, and is besides intelligent and conscientious. Mr. Smith has been strongly importuned while here to appoint his deputy, but has not yet done so. We rather like his way of doing. He listens patiently to the request of all, and will probably do as he thinks best himself when he gets ready.

There is a good story told of "Walt," as he is familiarly called, about his first visit to Leadville, some three years ago. He was then deputy United States revenue collector and came here to look after crookedness in the payments being made by liquor dealers and others. He took the role of a drummer for a wholesale liquor house and quickly detected frauds in a number of instances. The result of his five days' visit was the imposing and collecting of over eleven hundred dollars in penalties. All wrong doers against the laws of the United States are therefore warned for Mr. Smith is not only an upright and able officer, he is somewhat of a detective besides.
